For many people, the addition of a new puppy also means welcoming a new family member into the home.

Unfortunately, it only takes a day or two for some of that cuteness to vanish and be replaced with a naughty pup that seems to get into trouble at every opportunity. This usually includes plenty of potty-accidents all over the house as your new pup begins to settle in. It may also include chewing your things, destroying furniture, or generally becoming a pest.

Rather than become frustrated with your puppy's behavior or banish him to live alone in the back yard, consider trying some very simple puppy house-training techniques.

House Training a Puppy is all about teaching him the rules of living with your family pack. With the right communication, it should only take a short time to get your puppy to understand anything you want him to do and this ebook is here to help.
